Plans Meet

Slate Conference With Architects

Several architects have been invited to meet with the Hillsboro Board of Education at a special meeting next Monday night here in connection with the building program for local schools.

Marvel Wilkin, president of the board, said that invitations have been sent to four architects experienced in school construction. They are expected to present plans for new buildings, locations, construction costs and a host of other details.

From these presentations, the board hopes to pick one set of plans or a combination of plans and then to proceed with the formal hiring of an architect, after a week of study, on the regular meeting night of Feb. 8.

WILKIN said the board is asking a number of local residents to serve on a citizens advisory committee. He declined to name them officially until they have definitely accepted the post.

However, the board hopes to have the committee picked and the majority of them in attendance at the meeting next Monday night.

Some of the architects have visited the site and obtained measurements and other data on which to base their preliminary sketches and plans.
