

High Court Shelves Segregation Action

Final, showdown hearings on ending public school segregation have been postponed by the U. S. Supreme Court until the court is back to its full strength. There is currently one vacancy on the court.

Arguments had been scheduled for Dec. 6. They cannot be held now

Appeal Issued For Goat Milk

Baby Must Be Fed On Special Diet

Two former college buddies spent Sunday scouring Highland County for a goat of the feminine gender. After considerable driving, the search proved fruitless. It's not as frivolous as it may sound. In fact, it's deadly serious.

The two men, Dale Balsler of Hillsboro and Morris Love of Tilton, roommates at Milligan College, Tenn., a few years ago, were looking for a source of supply of goat's milk.

The milk is needed for Love's 18-month-old son, Marty, who has an intestinal ailment. Specialists, after various examinations, say that goat's milk is the only hope in keep-until sometime after the new 84th Congress convenes next Jan. 5.

At that time, the new Senate will consider the nomination of John Marshall Harlan, a federal judge from New York State, to succeed the late Robert H. Jackson as an associate supreme court justice.

President Eisenhower had sent Harlan's nomination to the Senate two weeks ago in hopes it would be confirmed during the special censure session.

BUT SEVERAL Democrats objected to immediate consideration of Harlan's appointment and action was put off until next year.

The new hearings are to determine when and how the states are to lower the color bar in public schools as ordered by the high court in its historic decision last spring.

Hearings have been underway on desegregation before the court for several weeks. Final decision of the court may have some bearing on the Hillsboro situation. District Judge John Druffel, said at a hearing on a suit brought by Negro parents here in federal court at Cincinnati, said, after setting a continuance, that he would rule on the local case two weeks after the U. S. Supreme Court had made its final entry in the desegregation matter.
